The Great Hippocrates, Father of (Modern) Medicine

Hippocrates (460-370 BC) is considered the 'Father of Modern' medicine, but, with just a cursory examination of his life and teachings, it is obvious that by today's standards he would be considered a 'Natural Health Practitioner.' Hippocrates believed in the "healing power of nature" and advocated the use of specialized medicine and drugs only sparingly. His medical storehouse included his own beehives to harness the healing powers of raw honey, and an olive orchard to secure a ready supply of therapeutic olive oil. In addition, he maintained a garden of over 250 select herbs and foods that he used for prevention and treatment of ailments.

Jerusalem Artichoke, nutrient dense superfood and supplement

The Jerusalem artichoke is not an artichoke and did not come from Jerusalem. It is actually native to North America and is a member of the aster family, with blooms that look like miniature sunflowers. It is found (sometimes growing like a weed!) in the eastern U.S. and Canada west to North Dakota and south to northern Florida and Texas. Jerusalem artichoke is rich in both prebiotic fibers and inulin. It is rich in B vitamins, including B3, (also known as niacin), vitamin B9 (folate) and vitamin B5 (pantothenic acid). Jerusalem artichoke is also a good source of vitamin C, phosphorus, thiamine and copper.
